Does This PR Challenge Sound Familiar?

You need reliable press coverage to expand the reach and exposure of your brand, your product, or your awareness/education campaign. But reporters send calls straight to voicemail, making it difficult to “pitch” your story. Emails and Tweets go unanswered. “Earned media” is increasingly difficult to get, and direct outreach to reporters can be time-consuming, expensive and lacking in results.

Content marketing as customer support tool:
Biotechnology company reaps investment benefits by showcasing its support of business partners

Challenge:
Start-up "microbiome mining" biotechnology company sought visibility to drive investor interest.

Solution:
With a series of mat releases focused on the beneficial impacts of its novel technology, Biosortia built visibility, credibility and drove considerable traffic to its investor platforms such as Fundable and Localvest.

Reach:
- 2,400 media placements of each mat release, with a link and screenshot for every placement
- 170 million average monthly audience reach

Impact:
Biosortia's mat releases included a hyperlink to its investor page on Fundable.com. BioSortia shared its NewsUSA syndicated stories with Fundable and showed the boost in traffic to its page, which increased visibility for the Fundable platform overall and added thousands of permanent new media backlinks to the site. Appreciative of the exposure, Fundable gave Biosortia a top slot in a featured section of its website. In this way, Biosortia was able to show how it was supporting one of its key business partners, and in return, gained a prominent value-add placement that drove even more traffic to their page.

"Our series of syndicated features was initially intended for visibility for our company to attract and expand our investors. Yet, we quickly learned the value of these features as a customer support tool and as an important way to differentiate ourselves among our stakeholders. The syndicated articles not only provided value, visibility and traffic to Biosortia, but also to the investor platforms we are hosted on. It is a win-win. Now, we have additional investor platforms proactively reaching out and courting us because they see how our investment in media articles brings value to them too."

Winery boosts orders by showing distributors news coverage in local markets

Challenge:
Viansa Winery aimed to enhance brand awareness for its products, increase channels of distribution and, ultimately, increase sales.

Solution:
Viansa collaborated with NewsUSA on a series of mat releases and radio news releases featuring its wines, monthly gift basket subscription and specialty food items.

Results & Impact:
Via NewsUSA, Viansa was able to place syndicated features about its wine and food offerings news sites across the country. Viansa's sale team shared these local news articles with regional distributors and local shops carrying their products. They showcased to these important customers how the winery was working to drive sales in that local market, and even at that particular store.

The articles were door openers to additional sales discussions, as many of its local distributors and sellers were both impressed and appreciative. Orders grew as a result.

As seen on:

The 4 Most Common Questions We Get Asked (with Answers!)

1

What exactly is a “mat Release” or “syndicated story”?

Syndicated stories, also known as mat releases, are consumer-friendly feature news stories that are pre-packaged/pre-formatted (headline + article + photo) and distributed to media syndication networks. Marketers, public relations professionals and communications departments use mat releases to amplify the reach of their content. Newspapers, magazines, TV news stations and other news outlets use mat releases to augment and expand the content they develop in-house. The term “mat release” is actually a holdover from a pre-digital time when each page of a newspaper was designed, formatted and laid out by hand for printing presses. Mat releases were type-set, print-ready and circulated in standard sizes so that they could fill empty column inches that editors might be looking to fill.

How is a mat release different from a press release?

Press releases are announcements from an organization/business /nonprofit written for distribution to journalists. These are often sent over services like PRNewswire or BusinessWire. The subscribers of these wires are journalists who use (or not) press releases to decide what news to cover. Mat releases, however, are pre-written news stories already developed specifically for a consumer audience, to be read and digested in context with other feature news stories. With a mat release, you are not dependent on a reporter/editor deciding to “cover” your press release and write an article (using information and quotes you may or may not want them to). With a NewsUSA mat release, you can by-pass editors and get your brand, your message and your story on thousands of news sites (community newspapers, radio news sites, TV news sites, etc.) with guaranteed placement and guaranteed reach.

What’s the difference between working with NewsUSA versus sending a press release out through one of the press release distribution wire services?

In short, press releases are not written for consumer readers. Press releases are for a different target audience: the press. Editors and reporters use press releases (or not, as the case often is) to determine what stories to cover. More often than not, press releases end up “on the cutting room floor” of newsrooms. With NewsUSA, however, our mat releases are written as educational & informative feature news stories (that happen to mention your brand and messaging). They blend seamlessly in with news sites via our syndication network, where pick-up and placement is guaranteed on 2,400 news sites (daily papers, TV and radio news networks, etc.) that reach more than 170 million cumulative monthly readers.

How do you differ from PR agencies?

PR agencies – as well as in-house communications and marketing teams – are some of our best clients. Agencies commonly engage with NewsUSA to deliver guaranteed media placements (2,400!) and guaranteed reach (170 million!) over our syndication network, which in turn can bolster their own reporting to clients. But we are not a PR firm ourselves. We do not ask for a monthly retainer or bill for every 15 minutes of work. Rather, we offer a fixed “pay as you go” solution to media visibility needs – be it one mat release, a bundle of 3 or more (ask about our series discounts!) or value-added radio news release and Instagram “boosts” for the mat release. We can deliver results, while containing costs. We are NOT a PR agency, but we are a cost-efficient core part of PR campaigns to reach consumer audiences with information, education and calls to action.
